Christmas Eve

This year the Christmas holidays are different from those of other years due to the restrictions and anti-covid rules and the Christmas holidays cannot be celebrated as usual.

The other years on Christmas Eve we gathered the whole family and usually there were about twenty people, cousins, uncles and grandmothers.

This year, however, there were only six, me, my parents, my aunt, my cousin and a grandmother because we live in the same municipality.

In the morning with my mom we started preparing delicacies for the dinner, we prepared the dishes we decorated the table.

When we arrived we all sat down and dinner began.

But we missed the other relatives, especially the laughs with my cousins, so we made a video call to wish us all together.

This is a great opportunity right now so we can talk and see each other even if only online.

After dinner we watched a Christmas movie and exchanged gifts at midnight.

Since you can't go out after 10pm because there is a curfew, they all slept here in my house, so we had lunch together on Christmas day.

In the morning we had breakfast with milk and apple pie made by my mom and after her with my aunt they prepared the Christmas lunch, instead my cousin and I dedicated ourselves to preparing tiramisu and appetizers.

In the afternoon we watched the Christmas concert on television and played bingo as we do every year.

This pandemic has stopped the world, our life has had a change that will be difficult to forget and it has made us understand that we must give more importance to the little things.

I hope with all my heart that this situation will pass as soon as possible and that we can go back to school, hug friends and be together as we did before.

Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to all. ♡
